Dialogue 1: When someone is airsick.

A: Excuse me. You look pale. Are you alright?

B: I don't think so. I get like this whenever I travel in an aircraft.

A: Is there anything I can do to help?

B: Oh I will be okay, thank you.

A: No problem. Just let me know if you need any thing so I can call for help.

B: Yes, I will, but I think I will be fine. Thank you.

Dialogue 2: Beginning a conversation with the person next to you.

A: Excuse me. Hi. I am Michelle. May I ask you a question?

B: Nice to meet you! I'm Lee. Sure, what is it?

A: It is my first time to go to Tokyo, can you recommend some places where I can take nice photos?

B: Ahh! Actually, it is also my first time.

A: Really? I bet you are excited! Is it for vacation?

B: Yeah. I am visiting some friends for a few days.

By the way, are you a photographer?

A: Yes, I am!

Dialogue 3: Asking information to a person next to you

A: Excuse me. May I ask you where you got the newspaper?

B: Oh, this? Sure. The newspapers were right outside the entrance.

You could ask a flight attendant to bring one.

A: Oh, all right. Thank you. Oh, no. The plane is about to take off.

B: Don't worry. You can ask for one later. Besides, I'm almost done with it anyway.

A: Thank you. May I ask you your name?

B: Peter. Peter Kim.

A: Mine's Donghun Lee. It's very nice to meet you.

B: Me too!

Dialogue 4: Asking about trip information

A: Excuse me. I'm Yuri from Korea. Are you Japanese?

May I ask your name?

B: I'm Masaki. Glad to meet you.

A: This is my first visit to Koto. This is a spontaneous trip. So I actually have no plans for what I'm going to do after I arrive at the airport. Can you give me some advice?

B: Well, I think you should visit some famous temples. They are very beautiful

A: What about Nara? Is it worth visiting?

B: If you have enough time and like old temples, then I guess it would suit you well.

A: I'll think about it. Thanks.
