Day 24: Asking how to be good in English

*Dialogue 1:
Asking a close friend*

*Dialogue 2:
Asking a native speaker*

*Dialogue 3:
Asking an English teacher*

*Dialogue 4:
Asking a fluent friend.*

Dialogue 1: Asking a close friend

A: How come you're so good at English?

B: What do you mean? You are good, too.

A: I am not talking about tests. I saw you joking with Americans the other day.

B: That was nothing. I just said a few things, and they laughed.

A: You can really communicate with them?

B: Why not? You can, too. It's not that hard, you know.

A: It's hard to me. So tell me how you do it.

B: I just do it. Don't worry about getting things wrong. They'll understand anyway.

Dialogue 2: Asking a native speaker

A: I really want to be excellent in English. Can you give me any advice?

B: Well, don't be afraid of failure. Try to talk a lot.

A: Don't be afraid to fail! That's really hard.

B: Most Koreans I see have stronger vocabulary than my native friends.

A: Really? So what you're saying is that vocabulary is not the problem here?

B: That's right. You guys know enough. You just can't express your knowledge.

A: Where can I learn to speak and express myself?

B: You don't learn it. You just speak, and it will come to you.

Dialogue 3: Asking an English teacher

A: I want to be better at English. I want to be fluent.

B: You're really doing well for your age.

A: I want to understand what they say in the movies.

B: You should study harder. Listen to the tapes a lot.

A: Would listening to tapes really help?

B: Of course, it would. If you have English speaking friends, talking with them will help a lot, too.

A: Would talking with my Korean friends in English help a bit?

B: Anything's better than nothing.

Dialogue 4: Asking a fluent friend.

A: Welcome back. How was England?

B: It was a disaster. I couldn't say a word! I need your help.

A: No kidding? I thought you were good at English.

B: I learned that speaking and listening is a whole different thing.

A: That's because you want to be good from the start. Try to start with easy things first.

B: That's how you became fluent?

A: No, I used to live in New York.
